Birds That Come and Go.

There are some birds that depend almost entirely for their means of subsistence upon the light winged summer flies that love the sunshine. These the economy of our cold season does not provide for. The tree creepers and the tits, insectivorous in their propensities, are content to seek food in the crevices of bark, up and down the branches of old trees, in the cracks of walls, in and out among the stones and bricks of old buildings, peering, probing, pecking at the creatures that have thought get safely through the cold weather by hiding. Not so our migrant singers.

Many of them, like the awallows, eat only such things as they can catch in their swift flight open mouthed through the air. These are few and far between in the raw and cold atmosphere of winter here. Swift and swallow, nightingale and euckoo, warbler, wheatear, whinchat, blackcap, wryneck, flycatcher—all the merry troop of strolling singers—must follow the sun and the creatures that dance in the sunbeams to lands that are sunny is winter.

The movements of the birds that come and of the birds that go is spring and autumn are prompted by the abundance or the scarcity of certain kinds of food among the varied store our land affords. The no-madic wanderings of our resident birds The Giffey Bros. are putting a new boiler in their tile mill here, and are able to find the food they require in one particular neighborhood.

Then insect life abounds, and round about the nesting place enough and to spare is to be found both for the busy par-ent birds and the insatiable chicks and squabs. But in the autumn and winter Mr. E. E. Fenton and her particular of the formers farm, a mile northwest of the Corners, the past week.

T. C. Clewell and Landlord Blair atthere is, strictly speaking, no such thing as a stationary population of birds in any place. Then all turn gypsies and hither and thither wend their restless way, cluding the famine of a frost here, the dearth of a snowstorm there or the buffeting of storm winds by continually moving on.—

A COLONEL'S PERIL. "One day," said Mr. Myvart, "a card was brought in to me bearing the name of General Woodhall. He followed it, and I found myself in the presence of 3 white whiskered old fire enter, who at once attacked me as though I were an enemy's position. "'Know my friend Hardyment? Colonel of the Haramendi Hosse-most distinguished officer.'

"I confessed that I had not the honor. "'He's in trouble. They accuse him of theft. It has been put about that he stole a handsome decoration, a star set in brilliants, at the levee yesterday. By George, it's monstrous! Don't you think

" I should like to know the facts ' I suggested mildly.
"The long and the short of it was that Colonel Hardyment, in the full uniform of his corps, had been the day previous to make his bow to royalty on his return after a long exile in the east. "He had entered the palace and was mixed up with the throng of dignituries

-pillars of the state, foreign diplomatists, officers of both services. "There he made the most of his time and with all the dexterity of an old and practiced thief had collared everything valuable that came within his reach.

"He was not caught in the act. But wherever he went havoc and depredation followed in his track. "And what might the colonel say himself? Of course he has heard about it from some kind friend.' "'Not a word. The fact is-Hardyment-is not to be found.' " 'That of itself looks'- I did not dare finish the sentence. "'Tll shoot the man who accuses him! personated him."

" 'But that would have been very difficult. First of all, the possession of his uniform, the knowledge how to put it on, and it would have been so easy to recognize him, to detect an impostor. Such a man as Colonel Hardyment would be well

"'Not in this country. He has not been home for years, and there were very few Indian officers at the levees.' " 'Were you?"

there? "I shook my head gravely. The whole thing looked fishy in its most favorable light-kleptomania at least. "You must not overrate my powers. Let us go at once to Colonel Hardyment's quarters. Where does he live, or, rathmean.

"'The day before yesterday, sir.' " 'He has no servant of his own? "'Not now,' interposed the general. He had a man—engaged him directly he came home—but turned him off a week or two ago. That was why he came to live here, where he could get attendance and be valeted.' "I now made a more searching examination of the room. It had evidently been ransacked, rummaged, rifled from end to end. Everything valuable had disappeared; there was not a trace of a trinket; the jewel tray of the dressing case was empty; the tops (presumably silver) of the bottles had been removed and some of the best of the clothes. "I saw no reason to exonerate the colonel until I caught sight of a bunch of keys on the floor, and stooping to pick them up found also an unmistakable picklock or burglar's skeleton key.

"It was the first suspicion of foul play. Colonel Hardyment, under the circumstances, would scarcely have left his keys behind him. He might certainly have forgotten them, but even that would not account for the skeleton key. "Tell me more about the colonel's late servant, will you, General Woodhall? Where did he get him? "'Through an agency, I believe. Raskelf was his name-a smart, soldierlike chap-about Hardyment's own size, had rather a look of him, indeed'-"But even as I spoke there was a sound of hurried footsteps on the stairs, and some one broke suddenly into the room a wild, disheveled figure—dirty, unshorn, in ragged clothes—who threw himself all of a heap in an armchair.

"It was Colonel Hardyment himself. Concern, surprise, indignation, were the feelings expressed on both sides, and I con-fees I shared them and was deeply affected when I heard the colonel's story, which, after a good dose of brandy, he was strong enough to tell.

"He had returned to his chambers late one night from his club when he found a message waiting for him. An old soldier friend of his, who had just come home and was staying at the Royal hotel, Blackfrians, had been taken suddenly dangerously ill. Would Colonel Hardyment come at once in the cab sent?

"He jumped in, was driven off rapidly along the embankment, the long line of lights on which were the last things he listinctly remembered. Somewhere there he lost consciousness—a vague recollection of the odor of chloroform clung to him-and only came to himself long afterward, as it seemed, and then he was awakened by a sharp sense of discomfort and pain.
"He found that he was bound hand and foot to the bench on which he lay. Then the pale dawn broke and gave a structure that den in which he was imprisoned. It was a back southery of | $455654.8446 6546464.848 probably a long empty and deserte

"He made frantic, fruitless efforts to free himself and shouted at intervals till he was voiceless and faint from exhaustion. At last in one of mis wildest struggles the beach to which he was fastened toppled over, and he came heavily to the ground. "He must have lain senseless for hours. When he regained consciousness, he heard voices. Two men were in the kitchen too busily engaged to take any notice of him.

" 'Where'll ye stow it?" "Here in the chimley, high up above the damper. It'll lie there safe until tomorrow: then we'll fetch in Ikey to

"'And this cove?' said the first speaker, giving Hardyment a savage kick.
"'Let him rot. Leave him where he is. Maybe tomorrow we'll do for him. It'll be safest, eb?

"Then the two ruffians-one of whom the colonel recognized as his discharged servant, Easkelf-departed without another thought of their captive. "There was no hope for him. Present torture prolonged past endurance perhaps, then a violent death. He rolled to and fro, now above and now under the beach, continually injuring himself and yelling often with the pain of some sudden collision or blow.

"Then he struck against something. The fingers of his right hand touched it, and with the exeggerated sense of touch due to his position he realized that it was a matchbox! "Although his wrist was bound, his fingers were free, and at last, after endless attempte, he opened the box, and then ensued a long struggle before he could strike a match. But he succeeded, finally succeeded also in applying the light to one of his bonds.

"A second and a third match were necessary, but at last the cord caught fire and was burned-oh, so slowly!smoldering, smoldering, all the night through. The dawn had broken before his right hand was free.

"To escape from the house was an easy matter. But it took three hours to drag himself to Pall Mall from Seacole street, Stratford, and he was well nigh done when he reached his home.

"In less than an hour a watch was set upon the house in which the colonel had been imprisoned. The two scoundrels who had been first his captors, then his jailers, and one at least of them his personator, were taken red handed as they returned in search of their "swag." English Exchange.
